

„Tarzan of the Apes” by Hal Foster, 1929

TARZAN OF THE APES No. 16 (Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.) By Edgar Rice Burroughs

In the heart of the jungle, Tarzan, the great ape-man, was looking up at the sky. He had just seen a strange light in the distance. He was not sure what it was, but he felt that it was something important. He decided to follow it.

He moved quickly through the trees, his long legs carrying him with ease. He was not afraid of the dark, for he had learned to see in the night. He was a true hunter, and he knew that he must be alert at all times.

As he moved on, he heard a low growl. He stopped and looked back. A large ape was following him. Tarzan knew that he was being followed, but he did not care. He was used to the company of the apes. He was their king, and they respected him.

He continued on his way, and the ape followed him. Tarzan was not sure what the ape wanted, but he did not stop. He was going to see what the light was.

At last, he saw it. A bright light in the distance. He moved towards it, and the ape followed him. Tarzan was not sure what it was, but he felt that it was something important. He decided to follow it.

TARZAN OF THE APES No. 17 (Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.) By Edgar Rice Burroughs

Tarzan was not sure what the light was, but he felt that it was something important. He decided to follow it. He moved quickly through the trees, his long legs carrying him with ease. He was not afraid of the dark, for he had learned to see in the night. He was a true hunter, and he knew that he must be alert at all times.

As he moved on, he heard a low growl. He stopped and looked back. A large ape was following him. Tarzan knew that he was being followed, but he did not care. He was used to the company of the apes. He was their king, and they respected him.

He continued on his way, and the ape followed him. Tarzan was not sure what the ape wanted, but he did not stop. He was going to see what the light was.

At last, he saw it. A bright light in the distance. He moved towards it, and the ape followed him. Tarzan was not sure what it was, but he felt that it was something important. He decided to follow it.

TARZAN OF THE APES No. 18 (Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.) By Edgar Rice Burroughs

Tarzan was not sure what the light was, but he felt that it was something important. He decided to follow it. He moved quickly through the trees, his long legs carrying him with ease. He was not afraid of the dark, for he had learned to see in the night. He was a true hunter, and he knew that he must be alert at all times.

As he moved on, he heard a low growl. He stopped and looked back. A large ape was following him. Tarzan knew that he was being followed, but he did not care. He was used to the company of the apes. He was their king, and they respected him.

He continued on his way, and the ape followed him. Tarzan was not sure what the ape wanted, but he did not stop. He was going to see what the light was.

At last, he saw it. A bright light in the distance. He moved towards it, and the ape followed him. Tarzan was not sure what it was, but he felt that it was something important. He decided to follow it.

TARZAN OF THE APES No. 19 (Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.) By Edgar Rice Burroughs

Tarzan was not sure what the light was, but he felt that it was something important. He decided to follow it. He moved quickly through the trees, his long legs carrying him with ease. He was not afraid of the dark, for he had learned to see in the night. He was a true hunter, and he knew that he must be alert at all times.

As he moved on, he heard a low growl. He stopped and looked back. A large ape was following him. Tarzan knew that he was being followed, but he did not care. He was used to the company of the apes. He was their king, and they respected him.

He continued on his way, and the ape followed him. Tarzan was not sure what the ape wanted, but he did not stop. He was going to see what the light was.

At last, he saw it. A bright light in the distance. He moved towards it, and the ape followed him. Tarzan was not sure what it was, but he felt that it was something important. He decided to follow it.

TARZAN OF THE APES No. 20 (Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.) By Edgar Rice Burroughs

Tarzan was not sure what the light was, but he felt that it was something important. He decided to follow it. He moved quickly through the trees, his long legs carrying him with ease. He was not afraid of the dark, for he had learned to see in the night. He was a true hunter, and he knew that he must be alert at all times.

As he moved on, he heard a low growl. He stopped and looked back. A large ape was following him. Tarzan knew that he was being followed, but he did not care. He was used to the company of the apes. He was their king, and they respected him.

He continued on his way, and the ape followed him. Tarzan was not sure what the ape wanted, but he did not stop. He was going to see what the light was.

At last, he saw it. A bright light in the distance. He moved towards it, and the ape followed him. Tarzan was not sure what it was, but he felt that it was something important. He decided to follow it.

TARZAN OF THE APES No. 21 (Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.) By Edgar Rice Burroughs

Tarzan was not sure what the light was, but he felt that it was something important. He decided to follow it. He moved quickly through the trees, his long legs carrying him with ease. He was not afraid of the dark, for he had learned to see in the night. He was a true hunter, and he knew that he must be alert at all times.

As he moved on, he heard a low growl. He stopped and looked back. A large ape was following him. Tarzan knew that he was being followed, but he did not care. He was used to the company of the apes. He was their king, and they respected him.

He continued on his way, and the ape followed him. Tarzan was not sure what the ape wanted, but he did not stop. He was going to see what the light was.

At last, he saw it. A bright light in the distance. He moved towards it, and the ape followed him. Tarzan was not sure what it was, but he felt that it was something important. He decided to follow it.

TARZAN OF THE APES No. 22 (Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.) By Edgar Rice Burroughs

Tarzan was not sure what the light was, but he felt that it was something important. He decided to follow it. He moved quickly through the trees, his long legs carrying him with ease. He was not afraid of the dark, for he had learned to see in the night. He was a true hunter, and he knew that he must be alert at all times.

As he moved on, he heard a low growl. He stopped and looked back. A large ape was following him. Tarzan knew that he was being followed, but he did not care. He was used to the company of the apes. He was their king, and they respected him.

He continued on his way, and the ape followed him. Tarzan was not sure what the ape wanted, but he did not stop. He was going to see what the light was.

At last, he saw it. A bright light in the distance. He moved towards it, and the ape followed him. Tarzan was not sure what it was, but he felt that it was something important. He decided to follow it.

Tarzan bei den Affen

Links hierher:

- Foster, Hal
- Informationen zu TARZAN
- Tarzan: Sonntagsseiten von Hal Foster

- Tarzan bei den Affen

Tarzan

From:

<https://www.hillschmidt.de/pe/> - Prinz Eisenherz Lexikon

Permanent link:

https://www.hillschmidt.de/pe/doku.php?id=tarzan:tarzan_of_the_apes

Last update: 05.08.2020 13:13

